FOREWORD.

As was the case in the publication of the first volume of Early Records of Londonderry, the work upon this, Volume II, has been carried out agreeable to action of the towns of Derry and Windham at the annual town meeting in 1909 and Londonderry in 1910, the respective amounts voted by the towns being according to the appropriations of March 5, 1905, viz., two hundred dollars by Londonderry, three hundred dollars by Derry, and one hundred dollars by Windham.

In the previous volume it was thought best to confine the records to the acts of the early proprietors and the citizens of the township of Londonderry, which were published complete as far as the year 1765. Following along these lines the homestead records are transcribed in this volume, bringing them to the date of 1745. The editor only regrets that the space did not permit of the publication of the entire number. But this could not be done, so some twenty or thirty entries are inevitably left over for another volume, which should not only include these but bring the political records to about 1800. This, it seems, should really be done, when the towns will have the satisfaction of knowing that they have placed their early records in such form as to insure their perpetuity, and made them available to the public.

A well-known townsman of Londonderry has diligently searched out the vital records of the town from its earliest entry, dating back from 1710 to 1910, a period of two hundred years. We do not know of so valuable a work relating to any other town in the state, and we trust arrangements will be secured by which they can be printed at an early date.

PLAN OF TFIELD.

INTRODUCTION

BY REV. JESSE G. MacMURPHY

THE DOUBLE RANGE IN NUTFIELD.

On the 25th of December, 1719, seven representative men, chosen by the people of the Nutfield settlement, for managing the public affairs, David Cargill, James McKeen, James Gregg, Robert Wear, John Morrison, Samuel Graves, and John Goffe, decided to reward the earliest settlers for their courage and diligent efforts in occupying a new territory remote from other settlements, and at the same time adopted a method of rewarding that should tend to attract the relatives and friends of those already located along the banks of Westrunning brook. The plan adopted by the committee at that meeting was duly recorded in the Proprietors' Book and immediately carried into execution. By this plan each one of the original settlers, to the number of twenty persons, was granted a lot of land suitable for a homestead, upon which relatives or friends might locate at the invitation of the grantee, with a reasonable provision or condition that the person invited should be a desirable neighbor and ready to make an immediate clearing and settlement. It is interesting to pursue the record and observe the list of names, the pioneers of a township that has become rather famous in the production of generations of hardy, enterprising men who have continued building towns and cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and are found in every state. As far as it is possible to decipher the writing of a list of names, all but three of which are on the margin of the page, in a volume that thousands have handled and turned to the sunlight until the ink has nearly faded from sight, the first twenty settlers in Nutfield were:

James McKeen,	John Barnard,
James Gregg,	Archibald Clendennen,
Samuel Graves,	James Clark,
David Cargill,	James Nesmith,
Robert Wear,	John Goffe,
John Morrison,	Elias Keyes,
James Anderson,	Joseph Simonds,
Thomas Steele,	James Alexander,
Allen Anderson,	James Sterrat,
John Gregg,	Samuel Allison.

This action of the seven prudential committee-men was not fully acquiesced in by the little colony of Nutfield. In fact, the divisions that unhappily disturbed the peace of the old country were not all healed by emigration to a new country. The colonists were divided in both civil and religious allegiance. While perpetuating the principles of freedom in speech and faith, they found themselves compelled to proceed humbly in asking for grants of land under the protection of the Crown. The relations of the settlers on the various ranges into which Nutfield was divided were somewhat strained. There were many abuses of privileges and much intolerance, incident to the pioneer period of a new country. The English churchmen were in a minority, and greatly maligned by the Scotch, who came to America as disaffected and aggrieved occupants of confiscated lands in the northern counties of Ireland, despising the Irish whom they had displaced for their obedience to a foreign religious potentate, and hating the English with a national rancor for having gained authority over them by the treachery and baseness of court favorites. Less than six months after the action of the seven, or in June, 1720, a large proportion of the colonists of Nutfield were complaining about the character of the men that were being invited to settle upon the late divisions of land. Some of the new arrivals were deprived of their lots and forbidden to remain in the town; and on June 29, 1720, the sentiment of the town ran so directly against the actions of that immigration committee (or Immigrant Bureau), that a general meeting was called for July 25. The opposition was strong enough to dismiss the overzealous friends of the colonization scheme; but they and their sympathizers, mostly inclined toward liberal views of the royal prerogatives, appealed to the General Court, and on the same day, before leaving the place of meeting, the former party outnumbered their opponents and reversed the late decision against the committee, reinstating them in full power to continue the allotment of additional lands to the first twenty settlers. The Scotch immigrants were often more wary than wise, but in all the conflicts of the last two thousand years this characteristic of the race has been manifested, that wherever they have not the arms or force to prevail over their adversaries they avoid an open test. They have no very high regard for the authority set up on the turn of a battle or the scratch of a pen. They do not think it meritorious to stand up against an army to be shot down just to see which party can stand the most charges of gunpowder and ball.

The English in Nutfield found it conducive to their comfort to remain apart from the other settlers, and in the laying out of homesteads managed to secure a range of fine land that in a short period became known as the English Range. The Wentworths and many loyal subjects to the Crown formed almost a separate colony in the town. The appearance of the settlement along the banks of the Westrunning brook in 1720 must have been romantic. Imagine the thick growth of forests largely composed of walnut, chestnut, butternut, and oak. Wild game, some of it unpleasantly fierce and dangerous to encounter alone or without arms. It required some time for each family to clear away timber enough to let in the sunshine and build a log cabin. The cabins dotted the slopes a little back from the brook, probably concealed from each other by the forests, and reached by private paths hastily cut among the trees. On a frosty morning the white curling smoke from the cabins along Westrunning brook rising over the tops of the trees may have been a pleasing feature of pioneer life. In order to have corn and beans and other garden crops before fields could be cleared around each cabin, the settlers combined their strength and cleared a tract of land together, and all joined in planting and cultivating this tract, and the name by general consent became the Common Field. It is easily recognized now on the west side of the turnpike about a mile below Derry Lower Village, and just north of the brook. The map will enable the reader to locate the Common Field of the early settlers at the south end of the Gregg land. The engraving is intended to give a view of the homesteads in their position and relative proportions.

For convenience in visiting one another, these families had their homesteads laid out in narrow farms of sixty acres each, arranged in parallel lines, so that the cabins, all being at the ends of the farms, were not over thirty rods apart, and by placing two ranges together, both facing the brook, the cultivated ends approaching each other, two rows of rude cabins were stretched along Westrunning brook from the point where it empties into Beaver brook, then called a river, to the most easterly side of the settlement, about five hundred rods distant. As the farms were three hundred and twenty rods in length the Double Range embraced an area of two thousand acres.

To identify the sites of the original settlers only a few directions are requisite. The easiest method is that of following the record of the laying out of a highway, always bearing in mind the dimensions of the original homesteads. The position of the highways will indicate the situation of the cabins, and quite frequently the record indicates on which side of the road one must look for traces of the log cabins and cultivated fields. A clearer understanding of the situation of the settlers' cabins in the south part of the Double Range is afforded by a quotation from the old Proprietors' Book. It will be seen in the record that the name of Nutfield had given place to that of Londonderry as the one finally fixed by the Charter of King George I., June 21, 1722:

Londonderry, June 1, 1723. Laid out by the Selectmen a highway beginning at the lower side of James Doak's lot and so running easterly across the said lot to John Anderson's lot, and from thence to Abel Merrill's lot, and from thence to Randall Alexander's lot, and so to the south side of Robert Doak's house, across his lot, and across Alexander Walker's lot, and so to John Clark's lot easterly, and so across James Anderson's lot as near easterly as good ground is convenient, and so across James Alexander's lot as the highway now runs, and from thence across James Morrison's lot, John Mitchell's lot, Archibald Clendennen's lot, and John Barnard's lot, as the highway now runs, and from thence across until it comes to that road that goes up between Mr. McKeen's lot and John Barnard's lot, and the said highway is to be continued and kept clear four rods wide.

A more satisfactory proof of the relative positions of the early homes of these families could not be found in all the traditions or annals of living descendants, however carefully handed down from generation to generation. The place of beginning as shown in the map is immediately south of the junction of Westrunning brook with Beaver river or brook. As these homesteads were only thirty rods wide, the average distances between the homes must be within that limit, and it appears in the record that no lot was vacant in 1723. Some of these settlers became discontented, and removed to other parts of the town in a few years from the time of laying out this road, and a few of them joined other colonies. In the allotment of second divisions of about forty acres to each inhabitant, quite a large proportion of them discovered advantages in changing their residences from the homestead to the second division, perhaps in the quality of the soil, the quantity of meadow accessible, or the presence of good springs of water.

In some instances descendants of the first settlers in the Double Range remained upon the same homesteads until the present generation. Sometimes they have returned to their native town to purchase again the old homesteads that passed out of the family some generations ago. The descendants wherever found manifest a lively interest in the history of the early pioneer days of a wonderful people that came a long distance to settle in the wilds of America and found a great commonwealth in the Occident.

The McKeens lived on their ancestral lands until a comparatively recent period. The Clarks remained for many generations on the same homestead allotments, their late residences being well known by the present inhabitants of the town. The Greggs have continued the family name for a hundred and seventy-five years on the same lands, made notable by reason of certain considerations relating to the privilege of owning and operating sawmill and gristmill upon Beaver river. The McGregors, Nesmiths, Morrisons, Alexanders, and several other families have continued their names in unbroken lines down to the present, either upon original allotments for homesteads, second divisions or amendments. Some of the pioneers whose names appear upon the map of the Double Range, although manifestly entitled to a reward of additional land on the day of the meeting of the Committee of Seven, are not mentioned in the record, probably for political reasons, and some whose names appear in the list had no homestead in the section covered by the engraving. The homesteads of those not represented on the map are to be found chiefly in the section called the English Range, of which a map and description are given.

A single description of a homestead lot in the Double Range will enable the reader to understand the plan adopted by the selectmen in laying out the land and give a specimen of the form of record found in the Proprietors' Book:

Nutfield, 1720. Laid out to James Anderson a lot of land in the above said town, containing sixty acres, and is bounded as followeth: beginning at a small red oak tree marked near Westrunning Brook, from thence running due south three hundred and twenty rods and bounding upon James Alexander's lot unto a stake and stones, from thence running west thirty rods unto a stake and stones, from thence running due north three hundred and twenty rods and bounding upon John Clark's lot unto a small white oak tree marked, standing by the aforesaid brook, from thence running up the brook to the bounds first mentioned, together with an interest in the common or undivided lands of the said township equal to other lots in the said town.

This James Anderson had five sons and two daughters, which illustrates the method assumed to cover all apparent differences in names of proprietors to lots, where the same lots are mentioned as assigned to other and various persons in a short space of time, thus complicating the task of mapping the township. By reference to the position of the first meeting house on the map it will be seen that the East Village of Derry occupies the upper ends of a few of the farms of the Double Range.

The Rev. James McGregor exchanged thirty acres of his homestead for thirty acres of Allen Anderson's homestead prior to March, 1721, giving Allen Anderson the southern half of his land and taking the northern half of his neighbor's, which arrangement provided for the abundant space for common and graveyard around the spot chosen for the meeting house. The highway leading southward along the west side of the cemetery is readily identified as the south road of the records, and the position of the adjoining farms identifies the original proprietors, so that further notes upon the original occupation of the Double Range would be superfluous in a general review.

THE ENGLISH RANGE.

Within twelve months after the arrival of the first sixteen families, the population of Nutfield, afterward the incorporated township of Londonderry, numbered several hundred, and simultaneously the allotments of homesteads were made to the proprietors under the charter to the number of one hundred and twenty-four and a half shares, exclusive of large awards in land given to some particularly influential persons who had assisted the emigrants in securing a grant of land. About seven thousand five hundred acres were laid out in homesteads under the schedule as recorded with the charter, June 1, 1722, and on the same day one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six acres were allowed as rewards for special services to thirteen persons directly connected with the procuring of clear titles to the land. The largest grants of land for special services were made to the officers of the Crown, who acted as mediators between the colonists and the king. These loyalists were the Lieutenant Governor of His Majesty's Province of New Hampshire in New England, and that body of followers commonly designated as the governor's suite, with colonels and men of military insignia in the service of the king. These persons received grants of land in proportion to the supposed importance of their rank and services, not alone in Nutfield but in various other settlements over a wide area of land not very clearly defined in early records.

Without controversy the section of the township which was called the English Range embraced the most pronounced Tory faction, and as Englishmen in sentiment, spirit, and religious opinions the settlers there had a profound contempt for the zeal, piety, and learning of the fugitive Covenanters by whose pestiferous preaching the whole of Great Britain was shaken.

The series of parallel homesteads that may properly be designated as the English Range began at the most easterly corner of Beaver pond and extended in the form of a rectangle whose longer side lay in a due northwest line to a point near Shields' upper pond, and the shorter line lay in a due northeast line along the course of the stream above Beaver pond to the limit of Haverhill False Line, so called by reason of a claim that the people of Haverhill made to the part of this town then lying east of a meridional line through that corner of the English Range. The longer side of the rectangle was about six hundred rods in length, and the shorter, the length of a farm or homestead of the common pattern, three hundred and twenty rods. An actual survey of the farms covered by the transcripts of the allotments shows the area of the English Range to have exceeded the amounts indicated in the records. This excess of land area is not peculiar to this range, for examination leads to the conclusion that many allowances were made on general principles for irregularities in the surface and especially for poor land, or land already partially pre-empted for hay privileges. The meadows were measured and bounded separately from the uplands, and frequently the meadow privileges of a settler would be staked and bounded within the limits and boundaries of his neighbor's farm. The laying out of meadows in the Proprietors' Book comprises a large part of the record, but in a general review of the limits prescribed in these articles, no particular attention can be given to this feature of the original plan of the land division.

The English Range embraced a beautiful tract of land, with fine glimpses of Beaver pond from almost every part, and some of the farms running completely down to the firm shores were selected for the more noted persons of the community. The map will show the plan of arrangement. The first lot of the series lies just over the stream above Beaver pond, that is, upon the southeast bank, and was assigned to David Cargill, including the privileges of the stream for mill purposes. It should be noted that he had a milldam at either end of this farm, and at a very early period of the town's history. He operated two or more mills at these points, twice utilizing the same stream for power. The upper mill was called a fulling mill, and the inlay was very near the roadside just south of the house now occupied by the widow of Benjamin Adams and upon the east side of the road where the stream now crosses the highway to run to his sawmill. Captain Cargill's other mill was called a cornmill or gristmill and was continued until the last generation, having been purchased by John MacMurphy previous to 1755, and remaining in the family for five generations.

The second homestead, joining Captain David Cargill's, was laid out or offered to several persons beside Samuel Houston, who do not appear to have cared much for it. It was once laid out to Colonel Wainwright, as may be seen by a reference to the next allotment following. This homestead can easily be identified as the farm upon which George Clark now lives.

The next farm abutting handsomely upon Beaver pond was laid out to the representative of the Crown.

The following agreement will explain the laying out of some of these lots. It was made at the time when the people of Nutfield had secured a deed of the land, on which they had settled, from Col. John Wheelwright of Wells, Me.:

These presents witnesseth that the Rev. James McGregor and Samuel Graves do in the name of the people of Nutfield and by virtue of being a committee from them agree that the Honorable Governor John Wentworth of Portsmouth and Col. Wheelwright of Wells and their heirs forever should have and possess two lots with them in Nutfield, lying to the northward of and butting upon Beaver pond, to wit: Lt.-Gov. Wentworth to have the third and Col. Wheelwright the fourth in order upon that range, together with what second divisions will fall to the said lots throughout the said town, and each of these gentlemen and their heirs to have besides the said lots five hundred acres apiece forever laid out in farms where they shall think fit in the said town.

Recorded this 9th day of January, 1720.

Per John Goffe,
Town Clerk.

It appears from contemporary evidence that there was scarcely a resident of the English Range in 1719 who was not titled and serving the government in some capacity. Their descendants of the next generation were conspicuous leaders in the French and Indian wars. Very familiar are the names of Colonel Thornton, Colonel Barr, Sir James Leslie, Captain Blair, Ensign Blair, Captain Cargill, Colonel Wainwright, Colonel Wheeler, and Lieutenant John Goffe.

In connection with the locating of some whose names are not on the map, it may be added that between the English Range and Chester line were a few farms not drawn or outlined; the farm of James Calderwood, between the upper end and the line, at the narrowest place, opposite the lot of John Barr, being a distance of forty rods, and the farm next on the southeast of James Calderwood was laid out to Joshua Thornton and John MacMurphy in consideration of their appointment as administrators to the estate of James Hunter of Boston. Continuing along the line, the highway passed through Samuel Penhallow's lot and then through the lots of Samuel Graves, John Goffe, Jr., Stephen Pierce, and Andrew Spalding to the fulling mill.

For the clearer apprehension of the neighborly condition of the original settlers in respect to their houses, one needs only to know that they dwelt along the present range road and in the order given, that road having been laid out very early. The limits of the range are George W. Dickey's lot at the upper end and Benjamin Adams' at the lower end. George W. Dickey owns the lots of John Shields, James Rogers, James Moore, and John Blair. George I. Choate lately occupied the James Blair place. John F. Baker is on the John Anderson lot. James Sefton was on the James Leslie lot. The Cheever heirs occupy the two lots of James Lindsey and Matthew Clark. William Palmer is on the John Crombie lot. A. J. Seavey recently occupied the lot of Samuel Graves. The Chase heirs are on the original John Goffe lot, and the next lot east of Chester road is easily identified. Clough is on the Simonds place, Hill owns the Keyes place, and Morrill is on the Robie lot. Palmer comes next on John Senter's lot, Jonathan Clement lately on the Robert McKeen lot, and Walter S. Clement has the lot laid out to Samuel, John, and Janet McKeen.

On the road that led up between John Goffe's and Joseph Kidder's lots were the residences of the Chases, Horace A. Hill, C. W. True, S. P. Clark, O. S. Bartlett, and Mr. Towle, most of whom are living there now.

Returning to the southwest corner of Joseph Kidder's fence, and continuing the record of the same date as the last: "A by-way laid out from the southwest corner of Joseph Kidder's fence, from thence running about southeast along by Beaver pond until it come to the southerly side of Governor Wentworth's lot, then turning more easterly by marked trees to Samuel Houston's, and so over Beaver brook by Captain Cargill's gristmill, then running more southerly by marked trees until it come to John MacMurphy's lot and thence running up between the said John MacMurphy and Robert Boyce, the road being equally divided between the two until it come to the said Boyce's house." This road led to the meeting-house and is easily followed. It is evident from the record that Captain Cargill had a gristmill at the upper end of Beaver pond before February 13, 1720.

THE AIKENS RANGE.

The position of this section of land, mostly devoted to homesteads, is on the westerly side of Beaver brook, and the lots were laid out in parallelograms whose angles were somewhat oblique, to enable the surveyors to make common headlines and place the farms in one range. The westerly headline of the Aikens Range is the easterly headline of the Eayers Range. The easterly headline of the Aikens Range is a side line to the connected homesteads of the Coghrans (a notable family whose name is variously written as Coughran, Cochran, Cochrane, and probably to be identified with Coffran). The longer lines of the Aikens Range of homesteads are nearly parallel to the general course of Beaver brook. The homestead lying nearest to the brook leaves a wide space between that was not adapted to immediate settlement. At this part of Beaver brook the meadow margin is very broad, and at the time the homesteads were laid out all the meadow was staked and bounded for the exclusive use of the settlers as they had agreed among themselves. The legal possession of these meadows then became fixed by a formal act of the committee for lot laying and the recording of the former transaction. James Aiken had the homestead nearest the brook, but that was not nearer than the farm upon which the Bradfords live. The rocky ridge to the southward probably limited the lot in that direction. The general model of the sixty-acre lot was a mile in length and of width to correspond, but if the land was unfit for cultivation or already pre-empted for hay privileges the width often exceeded the average of thirty-three or thirty-four rods by ten, fifteen, or even twenty rods. The longer lines also exceeded the record by twenty, thirty, and even forty rods. It has been explained by old surveyors in the following manner: The chain bearers added to the length of every chain; when the foremost man had drawn his chain straight from the hand of the rear man at the last pin, he took the end of the chain in one hand and a pin in the other hand and stepping as far as he could in advance he reached forward with the pin and dropped it. This method would increase each chain length about the measure of a man's stature, and the excess for a mile line would be about thirty rods.

The next homestead in the range was laid out to William Aiken and comprised the farm recently owned by Mrs. Elizabeth H. Karr and some small pieces that have been deeded to other parties on the eastern end. Edward Aiken had the homestead recently owned by John Folsom, and this also extended originally farther east. The original eastern boundary of the Aikens homesteads was a small stream, which shows how much has been taken from the ends of all these farms. John Wallace had the lot now occupied by L. H. Pillsbury, and Benjamin Wilson's homestead came next in order, where Joseph R. Clark once lived. Joseph R. Clark also owned the original homestead of Andrew Todd. In the records, owing to the obliquity of the angles, it was represented that each end line was thirty-one rods, but in fact there is none so narrow even in these most excellent lands. John Bell had one hundred acres laid out in one strip because he preferred to take his first and second divisions together, the homestead of sixty and the second division of forty acres or its equivalent. Beyond this homestead the regularity of the plan of allotment is broken and the farms were laid out in such figures as the nature of the ground would best allow. The land north of John Bell's lot was laid out chiefly for second divisions and amendments, but it appears from records of roads and subsequent history of the town that most of these pieces of land have been occupied at some time by persons who built houses upon them and made homesteads of them, although at present they are mostly deserted and only the marks of former cultivation are apparent in old field walls, garden spots, stumps of orchard trees, wells, and stone foundations for houses and barns.

On June 17, 1719, the town ordered a sawmill to be built upon Beaver river and entered into an agreement with Robert Boyce, James Gregg, Samuel Graves and Joseph Simonds, whereby they should have the privilege of the river from the pond downward to the bottom of the falls, but James Gregg alone had the right of building the gristmill. The sawmill was built about where the late Wallace W. Poor's sawmill stands and had an acre of ground for a millyard for storing boards and lumber. The gristmill was not far from the site of the present gristmill of Lando B. Hardy and Gregg's house on the south side of the road as it turns eastward by the gristmill. These men were allowed certain parcels of land as rewards for undertaking to supply the wants of the settlers in respect to lumber and corn meal and other meals at fixed prices. It is seen in reading over the allotment of lands that James Gregg had a forty-acre lot laid out to him in October of the next year on the northerly side of the river opposite to his homestead and the mill sites, and that parcel of land covered the greater part of the space now occupied by Derry village; on the river side it joined upon his privilege and the margin by the river which he used for a log yard, the latter being in the vicinity of the spot now occupied by the factory of Benjamin Chase. Robert Boyce had also a forty-acre parcel allotted to him, for similar reasons, immediately west of that allotted to James Gregg. The actions of the town are not always understood, for it often appears that verbal agreements were entered into that never obtained the confirmation of a vote. Some agreement had been made with one William Gregg to give him a gristmill lot, but an indignation meeting was held upon the 4th day of April, 1720, and the resolution was passed that William Gregg for good reasons should not have the gristmill lot that was intended for him nor any other interest in the town of Nutfield. At a general town meeting held June 8, 1720, there was a resolution that John Hunter should not have a lot in this town. Some of these proceedings appear to have been arbitrary and actuated by party spirit and are fully equal to the average wrangling over rights and titles in the frontier settlements of the newer west of the present generation.

The description of William Aiken's homestead is such that the location of both Edward and James Aiken is known. The two western corners of this lot were marked by blazed pine trees. One acquainted with the soil of that locality is not surprised, although no indications of pine are seen at present within the limits of the farm; in reality, no forest remains upon any part of the land.

The Aikens were widely connected by marriages and remained for many generations upon the same homesteads. Many living persons were contemporary with the latest generation of the Aikens that dwelt upon their ancestral lands, and many anecdotes are told of their earlier generations illustrative of the habits and personal peculiarities of the race that gave a name to the range. The name Aikens Range was not given at the time the land was laid out to them and their neighbors, but in a few months there were so many reasons for distinguishing the two double ranges, and also the two parts of the same double range, that the two parts were named from prominent men in either part and the term Double Range became restricted to the pair of ranges lying southeast of Beaver river, and the two lying northwest of the river ceased to be associated together or called the double range.

The Bell family continued to live upon the original homestead until the close of the first quarter of the present century, and the last representative of the name living and dying upon the spot is remembered by some of the present inhabitants of the town.

The town records furnish numerous facts concerning the births, marriages, and deaths of the settlers in this range, and histories of these and neighboring towns contain abundant material for very complete genealogical sketches of these old familiar characters. The long residence of the Todds upon their original homestead and the distinctions earned by some of the men in the wars of the country have served to fix forever in the memory of the living and perhaps to the coming generations the abode of the Todds. The John Wallace homestead has made a deep impression upon the memory of many on account of the noble elm trees that have been allowed to grow up around the buildings and the ample yard or lawn in front with so many associations of gentle deeds and gentle people. Many young people have received inspiration from the examples of Christian men and women that have moved and had their being among the quiet shades of those ancestral walks.

All roads led to the great Canadian settlements that were older than those of the New Hampshire Province, and the settlers traveled between these, trusting to the friendly guidance of the Indians. In the vague geographical knowledge of the times and the real uncertainty of territorial boundaries the early settlers came to speak of all the northern parts of the province and even of the grant on which they lived as Canada. To add to this confusion of terms there was an emigrant named Robert Kennedy who had received an allotment of land in the northwestern part of the town. A road was laid out passing his land and house; others settled along that road and had adjoining lands until by some accident the road was called Kennedy street, and therefrom began a series of clerical errors. The street was Canada street and even the man's name appears to have undergone the same transformation. As three ranges of land or lots were surveyed through this region, the distinction obtained of naming them Canada West, Canada Middle, and Canada East Range. Then there came into the nomenclature of the township the term Canada Great Swamp, to include a vast region that was almost inaccessible and is of little value now.

From James Gregg's sawmill and gristmill there were two roads leading northerly, not including the English Range road. One led directly through the Coghrans' lands, and the walls along the sides of this road are partly standing near the Ladd house, or the site of the old Hoyt buildings. The other led through the Aikens Range. The Coghran road led over the Ramsey dam and into former Indian trails that took the same general direction towards the interior, and by way of the Amoskeag Falls, where the fishing interests appear to have centered for a hundred years. The Aikens road has remained without change.

The wall or fence along one side of the Aiken road, already there before the laying out of the road, was a necessity in keeping cattle out of the meadows that were already appropriated within every one of these lots. It is quite probable that the laying out of the road was a very formal transaction and was merely the legal establishment of the bounds of a road that was already in constant use and indispensable. As now, there was a highway the entire length of William Aiken's homestead upon the line between his farm and Edward Aiken's. This road crossed the Coghran road, and continued through the lands of John, Samuel, and Janet McKeen, and through Robert McKeen's lot, and joined with that other road that came from the English Range at the southeast corner of Joseph Kidder's fence and ran along by the pond and brook to the sawmill and gristmill below the falls.

There was a meeting-house erected upon the Aiken Range that had a short but significant history. The site was upon the northerly side of the road leading from the late Mrs. Elizabeth H. Karr's house to that of the late Frank P. Bradford, and on the land of the latter, upon the brow of a little hill. In the space covered by this map three meeting-houses have been erected, two of which remain standing. The changes that have occurred on the lots of James Gregg and John Boyce cannot be described in this general review, but require separate treatment.

THE EAYERS RANGE.

The prominence of the range feature in the original settlement of the nut country was largely due to the clannish character of the people. Families connected by marriages and common sentiments and opinions found it convenient and agreeable to dwell together along some fertile slope or stream, and to facilitate communication adopted the plan of parallel homesteads, long and narrow, with a highway only across the common residence ends, while the opposite ends remained uncultivated and covered with forests and swamps still occupied by bears and wolves.

The Double Range, the English Range, and the Aikens Range were not more prominent than the Eayers Range in respect to the dates of their settlement or the character of the people who formed and named them. An examination of the old Proprietors' Book will convince the reader that families occupied these lands before any name had been given, or any steps taken to build a township here, and even the name of Nutfield cannot be claimed as the earliest applied title to any portion of the territory. Dunstable is an older name that was applied to many thousand acres including all that was afterward known as Nutfield, and only relinquished when the boundary between the provinces of New Hampshire and Massachusetts was finally established. The transcript of the laying out of these homesteads shows the process of naming the ranges was less rapid than the settlement. Nearly all the Eayers Range homesteads were described as lying in the West Range, in reference to the fact that the Aikens Range joined it on the east, and for a time these two ranges were called the Double Range on the west side of Beaver river, thus distinguished from the Double Range on the east side of Beaver river.

The headlines of these farms extended north of northwest and south of southwest. The ranges are never described as touching each other, and in many places unappropriated land was left to raise interminable disputes and claims of ownership. This is notable on the westerly side of the Eayers Range, where there was much swamp, and the next range began beyond the swamp. The change of direction in the westerly headline is the source of endless complications in surveying lots, as also the merging of the Aikens Range and Eayers Range on the north, their side lines having different directions.

This range eventually became known as the Eayers Range by reason of the prominence of William Eayers and his family here and in other parts of this township.

The identification of this man's homestead and residence may be of interest to the reader and especially to a numerous line of descendants who have given their names to many important enterprises since the settlement of the Eayers Range. Therefore some further comments are made upon the exact location of William Eayers and the house in which he lived. In passing to the means of identification it is also to be noted that the orthography of the surname is original and has since been changed into Ayers. The roads leading by the dwellings of this range were private for several years under the constructive era while the township was still known as Nutfield; but soon after the charter was granted and the name of Londonderry therein established, corporate action laid out the highways.

The direct road began on the north side of the farm lately occupied by James MacMurphy and passed by his house and over the Aiken brook, and over the railroad bridge and across the farm of Alexander MacMurphy, and over the spring brook between the lots of Daniel Owens and John Duffy into the road that comes from John Folsom's house, and then turning westward passes again over the Aiken brook on the line between John Duffy and the Corthells to a cross road that once passed along near the Aiken brook through the Morrisons', Holmes', and Woodburn's lots, to accommodate several families that lived by the brook, their old cellar walls and cool, clear well springs being still visible. At William Eayers' house the road leads southerly, that is, by the Corthell's present home, and then by George Ripley's house, the old Bogle's lot, and continuing by the late homes of Peter Horne and Robert Jeffers.

Abram Holmes very early sold his original homestead and settled on other lands, where the family continued to occupy without interruption until the present generation. John Woodburn also complained of his land and was granted the privilege of taking a homestead in some other section of the township, and after several trials located in the western part of the town near Dunstable line, with others forming a new range.

A reference to the brief genealogical history of the early settlers contained in the work of Rev. Edward L. Parker will show these families along the Aiken brook to have been closely related by marriages. The Woodburn lot was never fenced off, but came to be common with the Craig lot on the south, and the two lots are united longitudinally to be divided transversely into three or more portions owned by James Duffy, John Duffy, William F. Madden, and Mrs. Charles McGregor. James Smith was not one of the scheduled proprietors of the town of Londonderry, but records of births in his family are given, and they are previous to the time of alleged settlement, before the date of the royal charter or even the deed of Col. John Wheelwright. The James Smith lot came into the possession of the Pinkerton family; there the worthy founder of Pinkerton Academy and liberal benefactor of the two religious societies of his generation lived and died. Thirty-one thousand dollars in those days meant persistent industry and habitual economy, and those endowments signified mature convictions and determination to sacrifice himself and consecrate the fruits of his labors to the highest good of his countrymen.

Robert McKeen's lot of forty acres was laid out bounding upon land of James Smith, and mention is also made in the record of a highway leading from the Aikens Range to Canada and passing through his land. The Robert McKeen lot was not granted for a homestead, but a second division was made, the same in amount that was laid out to every proprietor of one full homestead of sixty acres. The stream of water that runs southward through Robert McKeen's second division had been reserved for the use of a sawmill. The privilege of the stream extended upwards upon the banks as far as a spruce swamp. In this description the reader may readily locate the Aiken sawmill at a point recently occupied by Washington Perkins and designated as the Whittier sawmill, and earlier still as the Wilson sawmill. The forty acres laid out to the Rev. James McGregor as a second division were granted in part for a want of wood upon the lot assigned to him as a homestead. This is and always has been a wooded tract of land, but in the years when the Pages and the Spinneys lived there much of the land was in a good state of cultivation and there were flourishing orchards and gardens.

The Morrisons remained in possession of their land in the Eayers Range until they sold the homesteads and either removed to other towns or occupied their second divisions and amendment lands.

John McClurg's cellar wall is said to have been recently visible near the house of Warren P. Horne, a little to the northwest by the upper road. In other parts of the town John McClurg's name will be found associated with the possession of large tracts of land. James Alexander's homestead was in the Double Range east of Beaver river and had a second division allowed to his right on the southerly side of the Eayers Range. It shortly became a homestead, as nearly all the second divisions were needed to satisfy the demands for more land. Sons of pioneers reaching the ages of twenty-one required homesteads.

In reference to the Wilson lot, originally laid out to James Wilson, there is a marginal reading in the town records showing that James Wilson died and one half of the lot was sold to John McClurg and that became his proper half share according to the schedule. One-half of the remainder was granted to Elizabeth Wilson, the widow of James, and the other fourth to her daughter, Mary Wilson. At this time the Aiken brook, as it passed through the Wilson and McClurg lands, was merely a small stream that overflowed some meadows above in the spring of each year. The building of a dam and mills upon this stream at this place occurred many years after the settlement of the Eayers Range.

David and Thomas Bogle left their surname upon many swamps, meadows, brooks, and places. They appear to have selected lots with reference to possibilities of constructing dams or raising mill privileges on secondary streams where all the really available streams had already been taken. The lands were not suitable for agricultural purposes by reason of the swamps and stones, and the streams had not sufficient water to supply a pond. All of that swamp at the westerly end of the Eayers Range was watered by the Bogle's brook that crosses the road west of George Crispen's house and crosses another road west of Ela's house, at that point beyond and out of the range. However, the Bogle's brook carried a wheel to operate a fulling mill right above the road at Ela's. About a mile west of this Bogle's brook is another section of country marked with similar conditions, and a Bogle's brook runs through it just west of the Shipley or Londonderry graveyard, and, meandering through Bogles meadows and numerous other claims, crosses the road west of Charles McAllister's place and so on to join the waters of the more favored Beaver river.

Samuel Aiken owned the second division laid out to David Morrison, or that portion of it upon which the buildings were placed. It must be borne in mind that forty acres were granted exclusive of the meadows, and consequently many more are now included in the boundary since the meadows have been purchased. Daniel Owens purchased the western half of this lot from the heirs of the late Abram McKenney. The Rankine meadow was originally granted for about four acres and bounded on this lot. Sydney Burbank occupied the easterly ends of two lots originally laid out to William Eayers and Thomas Bogle. It is a little over sixty years since the last Robert Craig and sisters lived on the lot granted for a homestead to John Givean and passed over to James Craig within three years, or before 1723.

The Craig farm of one hundred and twenty acres, for it embraced the Woodburn lot, was rather distinguished from others by the many peculiar traits of the family and consequently the singular products raised upon the land.

THE HIGH RANGE AND MOOSE HILL.

The importance of a range is not estimated by the quality of the soil, but by the characteristics and persistent economical habits of the people. The most refractory and inhospitable portions of the township have yielded to sturdy and repeated attacks of the husbandman through many years of working days not limited to ten hours, nor even measured by the rising and setting sun. Every settler was a proprietor at the beginning, and probably few among these proprietors had any money for the hire of assistants. The greater part of trade consisted in the exchange of products of the land for necessary imports.

An examination of the records of the town of Londonderry in respect to the original occupation of the High Range and adjoining lands discloses the fact that while the allotments were not made until the town had been settled nearly twenty years the same names appear in the schedule. Some of these proprietors appear to have considered the acquisition of territory a source of revenue, and the wisdom of their judgment is generally manifested in the long continuance of the ancestral name in the community. As an instance of this characteristic and of this persistence of name, it may be noted that Abram Holmes was the proprietor of a homestead of sixty acres of land in the Eayers Range, and for his second division he received a farm that was called forty acres, more or less, and measured eighty acres, being one hundred and sixty rods long and eighty rods wide; also one acre and one hundred and forty-five rods of meadow at Bear hill, just west of Samuel Morrison's lot; also a meadow of thirty-five rods near John McClurg's lot; also seventy rods of meadow between the lots of John Wallace and John Givean; also thirty rods of meadow between John Wallace's and David Morrison's lot. These meadows were scattered widely and must have been harvested with considerable difficulty. Under date of October 28, 1720, there is upon record the statement that Abram Holmes had not complied with the homestead conditions and had requested the committee of public affairs to allow him until the first of January to make a settlement upon his lot. Permission was granted, with the understanding that he must settle then or the lot would be disposed of to others ready to make immediate settlement.

In the allotment of land to Abram Holmes the reader is made acquainted with a common feature of the records. There were other proprietors who received much more land, but this is an average amount, and the name has remained to the present. The farm of ninety acres laid out to Abraham Holmes at the north end of the High Range was divided into several parts and owned by Plummer, Greely, Gage, and McAllester. All except Daniel Gage of Lowell were townspeople. Jonathan McAllester, a lineal descendant of David McAllester, owns a portion, and lives near by on his ancestral domains east of Bear meadow on the road leading to the High Range over Moose hill. David Morrison was a brother-in-law to David McAllester, and within ten years of the time the two hundred and forty acres were laid out to him, or about the period of his brother-in-law's settlement in Londonderry, conveyed a large portion of this land to him, and there the name of McAllester has remained for more than a hundred and sixty years.

The farm next south of Abraham Holmes, laid out to Stephen Pierce and Samuel Morrison, is owned by George Plummer. Stephen Pierce, who was the grandfather of President Franklin Pierce, as a proprietor under the charter, received a homestead between the English Range and the Three Quarter Mile Range.

The farm assigned to Andrew Spalding has been divided into many portions. One portion was known as the Dinsmoor farm. Bennett, Hurd, and Greely about covered the limits of the original lot. Matthew Clark was a large landholder and left his sons many farms in various parts of the town. His homestead was located in the English Range. He was drowned accidentally at Amoskeag Falls, May 28, 1731, and his estate passed to his heirs soon after this lot of one hundred and sixty acres of land was assigned to him.

The present owners of the Matthew Clark lot are Lowd, Miller, Towns, and Farley. Samuel Houston's lot descended to the Caldwells, and Bolles, perhaps, although it is not always clearly evident that certain boundaries are original, and the former lines of division cannot be ascertained without actual surveys.

It is traditionally affirmed that Charles S. Pillsbury occupies the original lot of James Gregg and Benjamin Kidder. At the date of the laying out of this lot of one hundred and seventy-five acres to Gregg and Kidder the southern boundary was recorded as touching on John Goffe's land, and the land was soon afterward assigned to John Woodburn and John Senter, two persons whose histories are indelibly impressed upon the lives and memories of many generations.

The highway leading southward across the easterly ends of the High Range farms was a very important line of communication before the construction of the Mammoth road. It connected at the south end with the old Dunstable path, now known as the Nashua road from Derry.

The lot of eighty acres laid out to Samuel Barr came into the possession of the family of Peter Patterson and remained a long time in their name. They also obtained a part of the Cargill land, the upper portion, and Thomas Patterson died there a few years ago, and Israel G. Adams now lives on this farm. The greater part of the Cargill land was eventually converted into farms, and by patient industry became the cultivated and valuable homesteads of the Boyds. Col. Calvin and Mason Boyd, making extensive improvements on their farms, erecting large buildings, raising large families, and dying at an advanced age, are worthily remembered and honored by their townsmen. Daniel Boyd now lives on the farm of his uncle, Calvin.

There was at the date of the allotment of land a large area of meadow. Some of these meadow areas are represented on the map with names, but ten times the number are recorded in the Proprietors' Book. Among these meadows perhaps the five and twenty acre meadow is a fair specimen. It was divided into innumerable parts, and the early settlers living several miles distant were anxious to have even a small portion, a sew square rods, in this meadow. Sometimes these meadows were four or five miles in length, extending throughout the whole course of a river, brook, or creek, and only a few rods wide at the widest, and for some portions of the stream the width was inconsiderable.

Some care has been taken to indicate the corner bounds of these old allotments of land, as adding an interest in the map to those who have had any experience in surveying, or derive pleasure from the perusal of old deeds, or enjoy the recognition of a landmark that was old in the days of their grandfathers. The pitch pine tree was a common bound in the records of this section of the country in 1730, and if credence is to be given to the reports of some of the oldest residents of that part of the town, those pitch pine trees marked with initials of owners on one or more sides stood a long time; in fact, were of longer duration than the generation that saw them marked and registered.

As stated, a portion of David Morrison's lot was deeded to David McAllester, and upon that Jonathan McAllester lately lived. The two parsonages and churches on the Mammoth road, and the soldiers' monument and Glenwood cemetery, are all located on the Morrison land. The two houses and other buildings of the Macks are on this tract, with the greater part of their farms. The Mack farms include a portion of the lot granted to Andrew Todd, and among the relics found in Robert C. Mack's antiquarian collection was a powder horn picked up in the woods near his house, with such engravings and letters traced in the horn that he believed it to have been the property of Lieut. Andrew Todd.

It has been noted that this part of the town was allotted nearly twenty years after the settlement, but it remains to point out to the reader that the meadows were appropriated as early as any land in the township, and probably were cut and harvested for more than forty years before the Nutfield colony thought of securing a claim upon them. The people of Haverhill continued to maintain their rights to meadows in the easterly part of the town, and the people of Dracut, Tyngsborough, and Dunstable contended for the west and the south for many years after the charter of King George I. granted a township to this colony in the name of Londonderry.

July 28, 1723, there was laid out to James Blair one acre and ninety rods of meadow in the upper end of Bear meadow, bounded by the upland and by stakes that bounded some meadow of James Leslie. As James Blair lived in the English Range, he must have traveled twelve miles, counting both ways, for a day's work harvesting hay in that meadow, unless he sold his right to others. The same day there was laid out and recorded to James Leslie one acre and seventy rods of meadow in Bear meadow bounded by stakes between James Blair on the north and James Lindsey and Matthew Clark on the south. Looking at the records again, it is seen that James Lindsey had for his share one acre and a half of the meadow at Bear meadow at the lower end and bounded on Leslie and Clark by stakes. Sir James Leslie lived in the English Range, as did also James Lindsey and the others. On the same date there was laid out to Matthew Clark at Bear meadow one acre and a quarter of meadow bounded by stakes on Samuel Houston and James Lindsey, and thus every record adds a new name to the list of owners to a small meadow that not one of the proprietors lived within six miles of, and in a region not appropriated or platted into farms for many years afterward. This was an unsettled region and the bear, moose, and wolves, with other smaller beasts, still claimed the privilege of picking berries, or browsing upon the tender shrubs and other benefactions of nature not yet claimed by man.

It is quite probable that John Goffe is the earlier form of a familiar name. And it is alleged on good authority that John Goffe was a refugee in this country prior to the settlement of the Nutfield colony, being one of the three famous regicides of history (Wheaton, Whalley, and Goffe) that were concealed in Connecticut for a time. John Goffe may have been a squatter or a homesteader on the theory of occupation eventually securing a title, for it appears that the old book of records, called erroneously, perhaps, the Proprietors' Book, contains these entries, subjoined for the delectation of those who are interested in searching out the footsteps of marked individuals: "John Goffe, Jr., was born March 16, 1700; Hannah Goffe was born Feb. 4, 1705-6; Sarah Goffe was born Aug. 19, 1709; Mary Goffe was born April 12, 1711."

At the time these children were born to John Goffe, neither Londonderry nor Nutfield was here, but with the families of Butterfield, and Smith, and Graves, and Phillips, and others, they were here in anticipation.

THE THREE-QUARTER MILE RANGE.

This range of homesteads, occupied before the charter of Londonderry was granted, and probably not included in the deed of John Wheelwright to the colony of Nutfield, remained for many years in doubtful ownership, the people of Haverhill claiming it and all that tract of land in the present township of Derry lying east of a meridional line passing through the most easterly corner of the English Range. The beginning of surveys was at the inlay of Capt. David Cargill's fulling mill, and the millpond lay wholly in the disputed territory. An examination of the headlines in the vicinity of this starting place will show the insignificant variations in the course of an imaginary boundary once considered a matter of weighty importance. The origin of the name of the range is found in the dimensions of the homesteads. They were laid out two hundred and forty rods in length and of sufficient width to contain from forty to fifty acres of land. The westerly ends were considered more convenient and serviceable for the proprietors' residences and cultivation, and the easterly ends remained for pasturage and timber. The highway for the accommodation of the range settlers passed along the western ends and was a principal line of communication between Boston, Haverhill, and the settlements lying to the north of them.

At the top of the map is shown a portion of Stephen Pierce's homestead. He was an ancestor of the governor. Adjoining was the homestead of Andrew Spalding, the lots forming an exact isosceles triangle filling the space between the English Range and the Three-Quarter Mile Range and the homestead of Samuel Graves. The settlers upon these lots of the Three-Quarter Mile Range were disturbed by the people of Haverhill, and probably with good reasons, as it appears quite evident the deeds, grants, and charters of the times were conflicting and the actual settlers found themselves involved in seemingly inextricable difficulties, and compelled to fight or surrender without knowing the true cause of their misfortunes. It appears upon the records of the town that Governor Wentworth received and occupied a farm in this range, the first slice taken off the Haverhill claim, and that he formally resigned this land eight years later.

The land received by Governor Wentworth instead of this farm in the Three-Quarter Mile Range is identified by deeds in possession of J. Calvin Taylor as part of his farm and deeded by Governor Wentworth to his ancestor (great-grandfather) Matthew Taylor, in 1732.

Alexander MacMurphy, who was granted the lot south of Governor Wentworth, was the great-grandfather of the late Alexander MacMurphy, who lived in Derry to the age of eighty-four years and seven months. He was the great-great-grandfather of the Rev. Jesse G. MacMurphy.

No certain information explains the fact that the records show a manifest error in the allotment of these farms. If the record of the Governor Wentworth land is correct, Alexander MacMurphy had possession of a homestead prior to Sept. 16, 1721. The records of deeds at Exeter, N. H., show that James Liggett sold his half of that homestead laid out to him and Alexander MacMurphy in 1722.

The second division of Squire John MacMurphy, immediately south of Alexander MacMurphy, was laid out to him in March, 1722-3, and yet the description of the land shows Alexander MacMurphy to have occupied before that date. It is possible that Squire John MacMurphy, who was a man of great prudence, the first magistrate and town clerk of Londonderry, recognized the fact that no documents issued prior to the date of the charter could be considered legal or valid. James MacMurphy, the son of Alexander of the Three-Quarter Mile Range, sold his interest in the homestead, after his father's death, to his brother Alexander, and bought land of David Morrison in Eayers Range, where his descendants have lived ever since. The two MacMurphy lots are now owned by the late Benjamin Adams, and he owned the lots of the Cargills, his house being just above the original inlay of Capt. David Cargill's fulling mill.

The eastern half of David Cargill's lot was sold to Robert Gillmore at an early date, and March 25, 1724, David Cargill deeded a lot of several acres to Robert Gillmore for building him a fulling mill; the lot was north of William Gillmore's farm, hence it is evident the Cargills had bought large tracts of land from the original proprietors at an early date in addition to many grants from the town. The Cargills sold both mills and real estate to John MacMurphy in 1732, and he disposed of them by his will of 1755. James McNeal sold his homestead to James Gillmore, April 13, 1722, according to the traditions and papers of the Gillmore family.

There were peculiar means of identifying the Hugh Montgomery lands: the farm in the Three-Quarter Mile Range joined upon the farm in a short range southeast of Beaver pond also laid out to Hugh Montgomery. The farm of Hugh Montgomery was located along the side of the homestead of William Thompson.

The positions of some very old houses are indicated by the records, and it seems that David Cargill owned a house that was considered old the next year after the charter was granted to Londonderry. The deed of John Wheelwright, had it been sufficient to establish a clear title, would have included a portion of land that the people of Chester secured under a charter that antedated the charter of Londonderry, and several farms were laid out to the Haverhill line north of Stephen Pierce's homestead. The great farm of Governor Shute was still farther north, and a highway connected it with Haverhill and Boston, the center of power and authority in the Massachusetts Bay colony.

The lot laid out to the Rev. James McGregor is now owned by Rev. Jesse G. MacMurphy. The homestead and second division of one hundred acres laid out in one lot to Daniel McDuffee remained many years under his management and ownership, and the name still lives and is perpetuated in the custom of calling some farms by the names of former owners.
